

I have done well guidance!

Find out from the child/young person or the family what items they really like, this could be a reward that is maybe a trip out related, a favourite character from a book/film or programme or just simply something they like.

The reward chart can then be used in 2 ways.

Picture of the reward

If the picture is the reward you will need a good picture of this item which can be laminated and then cut up into a simple jigsaw of as many pieces you wish to aim for e.g. 8 pieces. For example, a picture of the arcades. The puzzle pieces will need either Velcro or Blu tack on to attach them to the reward chart. The chart will also need laminating and then if using Velcro this will need adding so that the puzzle pieces will attach.

Then every time they do what is expected/desired they get a piece of the puzzle. E.g. had a dry day!

Once the puzzle is complete, they can have their reward and then you start again.

Favourite item

The 2nd way is using a favourite item e.g. a character from Frozen you will need a good picture of this item which can be laminated and then cut up into a simple jigsaw of as many pieces you wish to aim for e.g. 8 pieces. The puzzle pieces will need either Velcro or Blu tack on to attach them to the reward chart. The chart will also need laminating and then if using Velcro this will need adding so that the puzzle pieces will attach.

You will need to agree what their reward is, this can be written or stuck on the chart.

Then every time they do what is expected/desired they get a piece of the puzzle. E.g. had a dry day!

Once the puzzle is complete, they can have the reward and then you start again.
